

Are you a first-generation college candidate (neither parent having earned a four-year college degree)?

Will you be graduating high school during the 2026-2027 academic year?

If you answer “yes” to both questions, you are eligible to participate in a FREE 3-day College Admissions Workshop sponsored by First-Gen Advocates.

In a crowded field where colleges have far more applicants than open admission spots, the first-gen student must compete for admission with the college-legacy student whom the admissions director may view as more “college ready” than their first-gen peers. Your application package serves as your “interview” with the admissions director – your opportunity to present a compelling portrait of yourself as both qualified and determined – very much ready to succeed in college. Your application packet needs to stand out and make a great first impression on that admissions director.

As a participant in this College Admissions Workshop, under the guidance of professional college admissions counselors, you will prepare your college application packet, including your personal statement essay. Together you will create an application portfolio that will present your credentials and accomplishments in a form that will demonstrate your college-readiness to your preferred college choices.

To attend this FREE workshop, complete this registration form, scan and return it to us. We will contact you promptly to confirm your registration.
